A local woman, Pauline Black, is going to spend the next two months in prison because she has not paid her TV licence. A judge found Mrs Black, a 32-year-old mother of three young children, guilty of not paying the £121 for a colour TV licence. This is the second time Mrs Black has not paid but the first time she has had to go to prison. The UK is one of the few countries where you still have to pay for watching TV. A TV licence costs £121 for a colour TV and £40.50 for a black and white one. If you are blind, you pay half the price. If you are over 75, you get a free licence. If you don't have a licence and they catch you, you will have to pay a maximum of £1,000. If you can't afford this, then you could go to prison. In 2002 they caught nearly half a million people. Only 24 went to prison.
